Center for Book Arts is pleased to share Paths to the Shore, a project by artist Sarah Nicholls that explores the ways that history, infrastructure, and nature interact in the context of Brooklyn’s waterfront.

“This project by longtime CBA community member Sarah Nicholls is urgently relevant to the current moment,” says CBA Programs Manager Camilo Otero.

Nicholls approached this project through an objective lens akin to scientific inquiry. She translated her research into a body of work that includes a series of artist publications and large-scale maps produced using letterpress, relief printing, and paper she made by hand from plants.

The resulting work offers unflinching documentation of Brooklyn’s marshland, landfills, industrial pollution, public housing projects, rezoned neighborhoods, public parks, and areas under threat of disappearing in an era shaped by climate change.
